The Daily Press

HONGKONG, DECEMBER 29TH, 1869.

MR. HART has been raised to the rank of a Red Buttoned Mandarin. Lucky Mr. HART! An account of the ways and practices of those belonging to the class to which he has been elevated, recently extracted from a northern paper, will enable the public to appreciate the stupendous honor which it must be to become one of so noble an order of men. The description that is given is rather below than above the mark, and fails to place in a true light the intensity of the intriguing and duplicity of the Chinese official classes. That any ordinary European can care for an honour of this nature, is an illustration of the intense love of distinction which forms a part of human nature. To be something that other people are not and cannot be without difficulty, seems to have charms, apart altogether from the question whether that something is worthy or unworthy. To be a Mandarin is to belong to an order of men devoid of honour or scruple; ignorant of what truth means; utterly selfish and utterly unprincipled. Though there are some exceptions, no doubt, everybody knows that the above is a fair description of the average Chinese Mandarin, and yet such is the charm of power and position that educated and refined foreigners are found to take a pride in being admitted to the noble order of the Madarinate.

It would be unfair to put this down altogether to vanity, though, as a rule, that failing has a great deal to do with the acceptance of these doubtful honors. Something must be allowed for the peculiar training which a man goes through before the reward is offered to him. He is already more than half blinded to the true character of the officials, whose order he joins. In so plausible a light have chicanery and misrepresentation been placed before him, for a series of years, that he has become unable to perceive the difference between truth and falsehood, or to penetrate beneath the superficial covering of decorum, under which lurks corruption of every kind, in the Chinese system.

The reward, however, to a man resident in China, has something more in it than the gratification of a mere piece of vanity. It constitutes an element of power of a certain kind. The Mandarin has the satisfaction of becoming the object of native adulation. He is flattered by Chinese in all directions, called the "great man," and treated with an outward appearance of mingled respect and fear by a swarm of hangers-on, who are induced by interest to affect hypocritical admiration for the distinguished foreigner. In their hearts, they so much despise him, in common with all foreigners, that they look upon their flattering and cajoling him as somewhat like TITANIA making love to the Ass. But the happy sinologue neighs pleasedly under the gentle touches of his subtle cajolers, and feels what a great thing it is to be so far more wise than other men to have penetrated by means of his knowledge of the language through the veil, which has so long hidden the truth from the ignorant outside world. Little does he dream that, by acquiring the Chinese language, he has placed in the hands of his subtle native friends, a wand by which he can be more easily deceived than those whom he dispises; and that, while he has learnt the Chinese language, he has unlearnt his sound common sense, together with his clear perceptions of right and wrong; and although he may flatter himself that he has overcome the Chinese by his superiority, he is but a puppet in their hands; that he appears to them very different than he does to himself, and that his old friends when they see him will, like SNUG the joiner, SNOUT the tinker, and STARVLING the tailor, cluster round him, and gazing in awe at the strange head he has got on his shoulders, wonder how, like BOTTOM, he has become "translated."

The Titania was sold yesterday at auction by Mr. Armstrong and bought by Captain Sands for the sum of $35,000.

Judge Whyte sat in the Summary Jurisdiction Court yesterday morning. The cause list comprised only some seven cases, all of which with one exception, were disposed off with the appearance of only one of the parties. The only case in which Attorneys were engaged, was postponed by request, until next Tuesday.

DEATH OF MR. G. J. BARBER, R.N., SENIOR ENGINEER AT H.M. NAVAL YARD.

It is with much regret that we have to announce the death of the above gentleman, which took place yesterday morning at ten minutes before 9 o'clock, under very painful circumstances. Mr. Barber had been ailing for some time, and, at the urgent representations, of of his medical attendants, was induced to take his departure by the P. & O. steamer, and had gone on board. Feeling unwell, he retired to his cabin, and almost immediately expired. The cause of death was disease of the heart. The melancholy event has caused much regret among a large number of residents, to whom Mr. Barber was very favourably known, both personally and officially. His body was taken away from the P. & O. steamer, and was interred with full honours in the Cemetery yesterday afternoon. Captain Robinson, of H.M.S. Rinaldo, and the officers of the Princess Charlotte, as well as those of the gunboats in harbour, were in attendance, and a large number of private friends followed the corpse to its last home. Mr. May, Senior Police Magistrate and Superintendent of the Fire Brigade was among those present. The coffin was brought on shore in the Naval Yard launch, and placed in the hearse at the Praya opposite the Happy Valley, where the funeral was formed. The Band of the 75th Regiment gave forth solemn strains, as the procession, consisting of a detachment of marines and Blue Jackets, together with the officers and friends above named, wended its way to the Cemetery. On arrival there, the coffin was taken out and covered with the Union Jack. The Rev. Mr. O'Callaghan read the burial service very impressively, and at the conclusion of the ceremony the usual three volleys of blank cartridge were fired in the air.

The expressions of regret at this sad and unexpected event were very general. The Colony of Hongkong owes a tribute to Mr. Barber for the numerous occasions on which he has given the benefit of his experience and knowledge in regard to public works. He was ever willing at personal trouble to be of service, and often rendered the most valuable assistance. He had been suffering for a long time from organic disease, the effects of which had been increased in some degree from his having worked very hard to pass a competitive examination. He has left a widow to mourn his loss. His services in the Royal Navy extend over ten years, the last four of which have been passed in the Hongkong Naval Yard, during the greater portion of which time the Engineering department has been under his charge—an appointment which speaks very highly of the opinion entertained of him; his age at the day of his death being only twenty-nine.

POLICE INTELLIGENCE.
December 28th.
BEFORE J. RUSSELL, Esq.

UNLICENSED HAWKER.

Lan-a-kin, a hawker, upon the evidence of I.P.C. No. 315, Khodu Singh, was convicted of hawking without a licence at 9 a.m. of the 28th instant, and causing an obstruction in the public streets, and ordered to pay a fine of $2, or in default one week's imprisonment with hard labour. In his defence, he stated that he had a licence but it was not here, and he did not know its number—how could he understand Kwei-chi, i.e., devil letters?

DESTITUTES.

William Deleny and William Curtis, seamen, unemployed, were brought up as destitute, by Charles Tonkin, P.C. No. 93, who stated that he had knowledge of the first as having been knocking about the Colony for six months, and the second as having been in gaol as a destitute. The first defendant produced a discharge, dated 20th December, 1869, stating that he had no place to sleep. The second stated that he had lost his discharge, and slept any where. First defendant ordered a bed in gaol, the second sent to gaol for one week as a rogue and vagabond.

ACTORS IN TROUBLE.

Chue a-foo, and Kwan-a-sing, two strolling actors were charged by Leung-a-tak C.P.C. No. 24, with being found in the Hollywood-road, Taipingshan, without a pass. The Lukong further charged the first defendant with having offered to let him take some silver from a packet, which he said contained silver. Defendants stated they were new arrivals and lodgers in the Tungbing theatre; and ignorant that they could not walk about at night. Cautioned and discharged.

A SLIGHT MISUNDERSTANDING.

Raimondo de Cruz, watchman at Messrs. Jardine, Matheson Co's, and his wife Margarita, charged Nifa Dapto, and Andreas Berg, widows, with Eulalia Scott, a married woman, with having unlawfully assaulted and beaten them. The bench decided that in the interests of society both complainants and defendants should be ordered to find bail for one month, in $10 each, in their own recognizances, to keep the peace toward each other, and all H.M. subjects.

REFUSAL OF DUTY.

John Morgan, of Wales, a seaman on board the British barque Belle, was charged by Mr. John Wake, master of the above vessel, with repeated refusals to turn to since Sunday last. Defendant replied that on Christmas Day he had asked to go on shore, and been offered by the captain $1, and that he wanted more; upon which, the captain had said he was so saucy he would not let him go at all. He would not work. He had refused work, and could not work. He preferred to go to gaol than to work on board. Sentenced to one month's hard labour, and forfeiture of six days' pay, for continued disobedience to lawful orders.

The case against Pedro de Souza, of Goa, a turnkey of Victoria Gaol, upon application, was further remanded until the 3rd of January next.

Several cases against coolies for causing nuisances, &c., terminated the day's proceedings.

SUPREME COURT.

CRIMINAL SESSIONS.

BEFORE CHIEF-JUSTICE SMALE.

The December sessions were continued yesterday morning, when the following jury were called and sworn:—Messrs. G. W. Snelling, John Inglis, Alex. McDonald, Thos. Hart, E. W. Stevens, J. Xavier, and J. von de Hyde.

MANSLAUGHTER.

Lum-a-chow, was placed at the bar, charged with causing the death of one Luk-a-tam. The prisoner at first pleaded not guilty, but after explanation by the interpreter that he was not charged with murder, he pleaded guilty.

This case, it will be remembered, was heard at the Magistracy in October last. The deceased man was a tailor employed, together with the prisoner, at the shop of one Lum-wing-loong. On the 7th of October, these two men had a quarrel, which ended with the prisoner throwing a pair of scissors at Luk-a-tam, and inflicting a severe wound in the abdomen. The deceased suffered so much from this wound, and was evidently so seriously hurt, that the next day Lum-wing-loong sent for a Chinese surgeon and a physician, the latter of whom advised his removal to the Chinese Hospital. The deceased was accordingly removed, but before reaching the hospital he died.

Mr. Pollard, who appeared on behalf of the Crown, for the Attorney-General, remarked that he thought the master of the shop ought to be spoken to by his Lordship. From the depositions taken at the Magistracy, it appeared that this man had acted in most cruel manner in turning the man out of his house when he knew him to be dying, and also he had stated a series of untruths from the beginning to the end of the case. He first sent a memorial, which was entirely at variance with the testimony of the other witnesses, and afterwards gave testimony himself that contradicted his former statements.

At the suggestion of the Chief-Justice, the two doctors, who were called to see deceased man, were brought into court. In answer to questions from Mr. Pollard and the Bench, the first, Wong-foo-kai, stated that he was a doctor of external diseases. He was called to see the deceased man, who had a wound near his navel, which Lum-wing-loong told him was inflicted by a pair of scissors. He examined the wound, and found it to be a serious one, told Lum-wing-loong so, and advised him to send for another physician, as the man was injured internally.

Lum-chow-fan, the second physician called in, stated that when he came he found the man without pulse or heart, and accordingly advised that he should be removed to the hospital. This witness went on to state that he was attached to their hospital. It was managed by a committee of about a hundred merchants, one of whom visited the place in turn every day.

The Chief-Justice, after remarking that the thought the last had been heard of this iniquitous place the Yee-tsze, which although called a hospital was indeed merely a dead house, went on to put a great number of questions to this witness, regarding the present management of the hospital, &c.

Mr. Pollard remarked that under the present management, the hospital was quite a different place from what it was formerly. The whole institution had been reformed and re-modelled.

The Chief-Justice remarked that it was impossible to rid the Chinese mind of the horror they had at any one dying in their houses. That was something that could not be remedied, and already a very striking case of the extent to which it was often carried, had been brought out in this court.

The shopman having been confronted with the two witnesses, was asked whether his statements in the memorial regarding the deceased man were true or untrue, but he stuck to it that what he had said was true. The wound could not have been a serious one, because the first doctor had guaranteed to cure it for $2.00.

Mr. Pollard said after what had taken place, he thought this man could be punished for contempt of court, but his Lordship said he thought it would be rather stretching his power to do this. It would be for the Attorney-General to consider whether or not a charge of perjury could be brought.

The Chief Justice then said to the shopman, Lum-wing-loong, that his conduct as it appeared throughout the case was most disgraceful. Whether the statements he had made in the memorial sent to the police authorities and the depositions made at the magistracy would subject him to a criminal indictment, and place him in the prisoner's dock, he could not say. Enough had come out to show that he appeared to the Court as a very bad man, and the Attorney-General would consider whether or not there was such a case as the law would punish. His conduct had not only been bad, but cruel, and he might have been the cause of expediting the death of the deceased man. Those of his friends who were present would see that he left the Court after having shown that he had a very bad heart.

The prisoner, in reply to the usual question, as to whether he had anything to say, threw himself upon the mercy of the court, and said there had been a quarrel between himself and the deceased, and that both became very much excited.

In passing sentence, the Chief-Justice remarked that the prisoner had exercised a very sound discretion for his own benefit in pleading guilty. The court was ready to take a merciful view of the case, but if the trial had proceeded, it might have assumed a much more criminal character. The sentence of the court was imprisonment at hard labour for eighteen months, and he would here remark that the conduct of the master of the shop had not tended in any manner to screen the prisoner.

The court was then adjourned until Thursday morning at 10 o'clock, when the perjury case will be tried.

After the adjournment of the court, the Chief-Justice, in conversation with Mr. Pollard, in regard to the perjury case to be tried on Thursday, remarked that, he had seen no public discussion of this very important case, but under the circumstances he was happy to see that those who had this matter in charge understood their duty so well.

WHAT BECAME OF THE PRINCE?

"I have been unable to find out positively what became of the Prince between the luncheon and the ball yesterday." So wrote the special correspondent of a daily contemporary in disappointment at having lost the track of the Prince of Wales during a few hours of his visit to Chester. It is really too bad of his Royal Highness to have forced "our own correspondent" to make this humiliating confession. Why did he not live in a glass house, drive in a glass coach, and carefully refrain from momentarily going out of the sight of the correspondent during every second of his stay in Chester? He ought to have remembered what the correspondent thinks his readers are entitled to expect from him, and respect the conscientiousness of a man sincerely anxious to do his duty. After all, it is pleasant to know, that although his Royal Highness cruelly "sloped" the specials, he was committing no dark and mysterious deed. He was paying a perfectly harmless afternoon visit to Lord and Lady Grosvenor at Eaton Hall.—Scotsman.

NON-LIABILITY OF TELEGRAPH COMPANIES FOR MISTAKES.

The receivers of telegrams will be disagreeably surprised to hear that they have no remedy against telegraph companies for mistakes made in the substance of messages during transmission. The law reports for October contain a decision to that effect of the Court of Queen's Bench on the following facts. An ice merchant, who had a cargo of ice for sale, received an offer by telegram for it at the rate of twenty-seven shillings a ton, whilst in fact only twenty-three shillings had been offered. The error, which arose from the wrong reading of the dots and lines which represent the figure three in telegraphic language, cost the ice merchant some forty pounds, which he sought to recover by action against the company. But the judge at the trial, and the court in banc, both negatived the claim, on the ground that the company only contracted with the sender, and thus the receiver, who was alone injured, remained without remedy. This seems a case of great hardship, and we incline to the American law on the subject, which treats a telegram just as we do a carrier's parcel, and, unless it is delivered exactly as it is sent, admits a right of action on the part of the receiver for any loss that may have been caused by the mistake. But hard as the present law is, both sender and receiver will be in worse plight when the telegraphs are under Government. The Crown cannot be sued for a wrong, and the only persons liable in cases such as the present will be the clerks who actually make the mistake, and whose pecuniary position will render actions an absurdity.—Pall Mall Gazette.

SOCIAL LIFE IN SHANGHAI.
(Recorder.)

It is somewhat difficult to say what it is that is defective in the ordinary routine of social relations in Shanghai, but few residents can deny being conscious that, to use a colloquial expression, there is somehow or other a "screw loose." It is true that people here meet and indulge in ordinary social pleasures and amenities as much and perhaps more than those in other places. We have our dinners, balls, concerts, theatricals among the lighter sorts of amusements, and for those of a more serious turn there are the Asiatic Society and the temperance lectures, and time was when there was also the Debating Society, with its array of orators, who, if not all rising Ciceros, it must be owned were often well worth listening to, and generally afforded some new ideas upon the subjects which they discussed. With all these means of social enjoyment—not to speak of outdoor sports in the form of races, paper hunts, and last, but not least, athletic sports and gymnasiums, it might be concluded that Shanghai was one of the pleasantest places in the whole world to live in. But, strange to say, if the truth is told, no one would honestly pronounce this opinion with respect to it. There is a certain something—to translate a French expression—which seems to hang like a pall upon all amusements, and to rob them of the chief portion of their pleasurableness. Half the delight of any kind of diversion consists in its affording an opportunity of throwing aside ceremony and being for a few hours free from wearisome and tedious formalities. But in Shanghai a certain amount of artificiality finds its way into everything. The taipan does not throw aside his taipanishness when he closes his office and leaves his business for the day. He is the taipan everywhere—as much at the race course or on the cricket field as at his desk, and with others it is the same. The broker, the auctioneer, the store-keeper, the lawyer, the clergyman, all carry their professions about with them, and are as conspicuously of the specialities to which they happen to belong, as if they were labelled like passengers' luggage. The result is that nobody feels free from a species of restraint of a very unpleasant nature. However retiring his disposition and his conduct, he is conscious of being observed and criticised in his every act. He may wish, like the "Spectator," to go about on change, and into a number of different places observing but unobserved, but it is useless to hope for such a privilege. Wherever he goes he is marked and spoken of as so and so, who does such and such; and being fully aware that such is the case, he shapes his conduct, almost unconsciously, accordingly. From this peculiarity everybody feels under restraint on all occasions where numbers meet together, and the feeling deprives half the social gatherings in Shanghai of the enjoyment which might otherwise result from them. Nobody of course would advocate that people either here or elsewhere should pretend to be what they are not. All that is to be objected to is the necessity of, as it were, appearing upon a small stage before a small audience on every public occasion. At home people meet on the common footing of competitors in the same games, or amateurs of the same amusements, and nobody cares to enquire into the private history of his neighbour. Here, the penalty of "shewing up" at all is to lay oneself open to remarks and criticism on all sides, and to be truckled to or snubbed according as the average run of people choose to consider themselves above or below one. Under such circumstances nobody feels free, and consequently nobody can thoroughly enjoy himself. Some no doubt acquire an artificial taste for being conspicuous. They go to theatres in magnificent embroidered caps, talk loud at dinners, appear at social gatherings with an undue amount of watch-chain, and in other ways thrust themselves into notice and claim the attention of the little audience which they are conscious is around them. But whatever pleasure may be derived from this—and it is to be presumed there is some, otherwise people would not act so absurdly—it is of a poor kind, and the taste for it makes a man almost incapable of real enjoyment of anything. There can be no question that everybody would be the happier if we approached our amusements in a simpler spirit, caring more for the sports and diversions themselves than for their artificial adjuncts, and could on such occasions contrive to meet upon the plain and manly footing of men having like tastes, and simply seeking a common means of indulging them.

THE STORY OF MISS WHEELER.

When we published the account of Miss Wheeler's detention by a Rajah in Oude, the Englishman thought it a fine opportunity to sneer as usual, and pronounced "the story, stripped of its fine writing, exactly the same as one told in 1859, and which for a considerable period went the round of the home papers." As if conscious of having written an untruth, our contemporary added:—"There is certainly a little more circumstantiality introduced. * * The story itself we may dismiss without remark, except an expression of regret that an idle tale of ten years ago should be resuscitated." Of course our contemporary did not remark on the story, simply because he knew nothing about it, and perhaps felt some disappointment that the revelation had not fallen to his lot like his cock-and-bull stories of the Wahabees. He only saw in it an opportunity to sneer, and he is welcome to it. We took no notice of him at the time, and should not now, so far as he is concerned, knowing him too well. But we perceive that some of the Bombay papers have quoted his remarks on Miss Wheeler's case without noticing how absurd they are. In his anxiety to avail himself of what he thought an opportunity, he overlooked certain things that must have been palpable to an idiot. The story is "exactly the same" as one told in 1859. Then Miss Wheeler must, in 1859, have been kept by a Rajah for 12 years. She must, in 1859, have borne children to the Rajah. Mr. Capper must have been a Commissioner in Oude ten years ago, which is not probable, seeing that he had only then been a few years in India, and that Oude had not such Commissioners. These slight differences show that the tale is not "exactly the same" as the imperfect one of ten years ago. We did not, and do not, profess to vouch for the story, and only know that it came from good authority, and we have reason to believe that it is substantially true.—Indian Daily News, November 10th.

REMOVING HOUSES.

There seems to be no doubt that in America they have discovered the art of removing large buildings without injuring them or inconveniencing their inhabitants. The Architectural Review and American Builders' Journal gives an account of the removal of Pelham House in Boston. In order to widen a street it was necessary to move this house sideways about twenty feet or to pull it down. It was decided to adopt the former alternative. The house is 70 feet wide by 100 feet deep, five stories high, and is supported on square granite piers with heavy partition walls of brick; it is said to weigh 50,000 tons, and is a hotel arranged in the French mode. The motive force was got by means of sixty or seventy huge wooden screws, with their heads against the first floor and their heels against the paving at the curbstone, the intermediate ground having been excavated. The house began to travel on rollers at eight o'clock on the morning of August 21st, and performed its journey safely at the rate of 14 inches per hour, carrying with it all its furniture and its boarders. The Architectural Review says there seems to be no good reason for doubting that the pyramid of Cheops or St. Peter's at Rome could be moved endwise or sidewise at pleasure, any required distance, by this same process. Under these circumstances it becomes a question whether, instead of building flimsy semi-detached villas in the suburbs of London, it would not be better to move a few streets endwise, sidewise, or anywise out of the heart of the metropolis into the neighbouring fields by this now process. We should gain space where it is most wanted, and give the poorer population fresh air without disturbing them. If we could see the Seven Dials going out of town at the rate of 14 inches an hour how pleased we should all be. City merchants also living in the West-end may go to their offices in their own houses instead of in cabs. Fourteen inches an hour is not fast travelling, but is little if any slower than the rate at which cabs and 'buses progress through Fleet-street in the busy part of the day.—Pall Mall Gazette.

VAGUE.—An old lady was asked what she thought of one of her neighbours by the name of Chibbs, and with a very knowing look she replied, "Why, I don't like to say anything about my neighbours; but as to Mr Chibbs, some times I think—and then again I don't know—but, after all, I rather guess he'll turn out a good deal such a sort of man as I take him to be."

HIGH TARIFFS.

The evidence given before the Congressional Committee shows plainly how mischievous is the influence exerted by the high tariffs of the United States. Mr. Low, a large shipowner, expressed his doubts whether the Americans would ever excel the English in shipbuilding, and attributed much importance to the system of subsidies, by which they had obtained the command of the ocean. "The English," he said, "exempt their ships from all charges. We tax every pound of tea and sugar that goes on board." Another gentleman, Mr. Poillon, thought all that American shipbuilding required was freedom from duty on all metals, cordage, &c., that enter into the construction of the ship. The duty on copper was now a prohibitory one, compelling the American to pay seven or eight cents more for a pound of copper than the Englishman. The duty on iron was 25 per cent. In consequence of the duty on copper, the owner had his ships repaired abroad. Mr. Opdyke, the Mayor of New York, attributed the depression of American shipping interests to three causes. 1.—The substitution of steam vessels, which gave Great Britain the advantage. 2.—The high duty charged on ship's materials. 3.—The depreciation in currency. Mr. Elwell, who had been a shipowner for 30 years, said that since the last war their tonnage had decreased 50 per cent., and labour and mechanism was 200 or 300 per cent. more. A stevedore's bill that would have been 500 dols. would now be 1,200 dols. or 1,500 dols. He was not, however, in favour of an entire abrogation of the navigation laws. The committee subsequently visited Boston to continue their investigation.—London and China Herald.

TOBACCO SMOKING.

Tobacco smokers must look to their eyes. Proofs are accumulating that blindness, due to slowly progressive atrophy of the optic nerves, induced by smoking, is of frequent occurrence. In one of the volumes of the "London Hospital Reports," Mr. Jonathan Hutchinson has narrated several cases of amaurosis, the histories of which go far to establish the fact that in each case the blindness was brought on by that rapidly increasing and as it appears, baneful habit; and in the Medical Times and Gazette, September 4th, the same distinguished surgeon has described another striking case of "tobacco amaurosis, ending in absolute blindness, induced in eighteen months." The patient, aged fifty, a railway clerk, enjoyed good sight until Jan., 1867, and excellent general health, with the exception of a single attack of gout. "For twenty years he had never been under medical care," and excepting the optic atrophy, no cerebral symptoms were observable. After leaving off smoking entirely for a whole year, no apparent benefit was experienced. "For ten years before his failure of sight, he had been a pledged teetotaller, had never at any time been intemperate, and continued his abstinent habits during the whole period of treatment. He is a remarkably intelligent man; was in former life a great reader," and, says Mr. Hutchinson, "he tells me that since his affliction he has been made acquainted with the particulars of many similar cases." "I have been astonished," he says, "to find that it is not the fast livers that it takes. It is usually the hard-workers and abstemious." He is strongly impressed with the belief that both in his own case and in that of most others he has seen, smoking was the real cause. I wish to ask especial attention to the fact that the man was smoking heavily, whilst taking no kind of alcoholic stimulant. I have met with several cases in which this history was given, and am decidedly of opinion that the injurious influence of tobacco is to some extent counteracted by alcohol." We can readily assent to Mr. Hutchinson's opinion, which, indeed, does but confirm the proverb, "One evil brings another," for we have long been convinced that great tea and coffee drinkers may persist in their habit the more recklessly the more freely they indulge in drinking alcohol also.—Medical Mirror.

BAD EXAMPLES.

One of the evil consequences arising from people with a good social position setting a bad example, is, that they are followed by a crowd of geese who think that they are bound to act like those whom they fancy to be their superiors. It behoves, therefore, every one whose position in life renders it probable that his actions may influence others, to remember that the accident of birth, or otherwise, which gave him such position, also bestows upon him a responsibility which should render him doubly circumspect in his actions. An apt illustration of this may be found in the fashion of duelling in Paris, which has been set in motion by a few celebrities, and which is accordingly followed by a host of others who must find it painful and inconvenient in the extreme to regulate their conduct by the standard of bloodthirsty fashionables who are constantly in the habit of meeting in mortal combat, yet somehow manage never entirely to kill each other. The French papers give an account of another duel in Paris between M. Esnault Pettri, capitaine d'etat major of the National Guard, and M. Escalier, who in spite of the cold weather fought, with swords two days ago in the Bois de Vincennes. The combat lasted several minutes, until the sword of M. Esnault-Pettri pierced the breast of M. Escalier, inflicting a dangerous wound. The seconds and the doctor, assisted by his antagonist, did their best to render the wounded man every assistance. He had fainted away; and as his insensibility lasted some time the worst results were anticipated. However, by a judicious application of handfuls of snow, which fortunately lay on the ground, he was at last recalled to his senses. While the unhurt portion of the party were engaged in this work of mercy, viz., attempting to save the life of the man they had nearly murdered, certain keepers of the Bois de Vincennes appeared on the scene, and took the names of the combatants and the seconds. M. Escalier was conveyed home, and the Gaulois kindly expresses a hope that his wound will not prove mortal. We hope not too; but as in the present inflammatory state of Paris M. Escalier will probably have to fight again, and go through the agonies of death a second time, or kill somebody else and live with a remorseful conscience, it would be almost a mercy to let him die, unless he has gained wisdom by his experience, and eschews duelling for the future.—Pall Mall Gazette.

RUSSIAN COMMERCE AND THE SUEZ CANAL.

CAIRO, Oct. 21st.

La Turquie, of Constantinople, of the 13th of October, under the head of "Nouvelles Maritimes," announces that the Russian Gazette de l'Académie states that it is informed from a good source that the Russian Steam Navigation and Commercial Company, of which the head station is Odessa, will not remain indifferent to the interests created for Russia by the opening of the Suez Canal, and that it has for some time past been the intention of the company to organize, on the opening of the Canal, a direct line of steamships between the ports of the Black Sea and of the Sea of Azof and the extreme East, with the object of facilitating the transport of colonial product into Russia, and of allowing Russian merchants to despatch their merchandise to India by a shorter and cheaper route than that actually followed. Further, that the company, which has followed with care the progress of the works on the Isthmus, was the very first among foreign companies to send the packet boats of its Alexandria line to Port Said, where its vessels have regularly touched since 1866; and that at the beginning of the present year, when the advanced state of the works of the canal indicated the approaching connecting of the Mediterranean and Red Seas, the company decided upon appointing one of its officers to collect detailed information on the character and quantity of goods exchangeable between Russia and the extreme East.

The chief Russian port in the Black Sea is Odessa, and in the Sea of Azof, which is also the outlet of the Don and its towns, Taganrog; and, according to the context of the preceding extract, "the extreme East" would seem to be an expression for India, or, at least, to denote that India, more than China, was in the author's mind when writing. I have not heard up to the present time of direct Russian seaborne commerce with India, though its ports, together with the route to them through Egypt or round the Cape of Good Hope, has always been open to Russia as to other nations. The completion of the Suez Canal would naturally awaken attention to the new interests created by it for nations having ports on the Mediterranean, or in the Black sea. But, perhaps, there is another circumstance to attract Russian attention in an increased degree, just now, to India, viz., the recent extension of the limits of Russian dominion towards our north-west frontier there. It is possible that a mercantile route may be found from the port of Kurrachee, by the Indus, to Attok, thence to Peshawur, and thence into Russian Turkestan, to be aided in due time by railway as far as Peshawur. The British Government would become the agent in the development of such a commerce, for it could not object to assist in its transport without laying itself open to inconvenient retaliation from Russia. By thus opening communication between our Indian frontier and Russian territory, Russia would at last become well acquainted with the road most practicable for maintaining such commerce and or transport in general; while, by the establishment of Russian commercial agents in India she would command an inoffensive and efficient means for obtaining information on the state of the interior provinces and of the opinions and temper of their inhabitants. This forecast of a way in which the opening of the Suez Canal, whenever it shall be rendered practicable for navigation, may affect British interests is perhaps not entirely devoid of truth.—Pall Mall Gazette.

A NEW ROUTE TO EUROPE.

The most important of the telegrams which reached us by the last American mail was one which, probably, received least notice.

"An important dispatch"—the wires tells us —"has been sent by Earl Granville to Governor Musgrove regarding the confederation of British Columbia with Canada. It says New Rupert's Land and the North West Territory are to be united to Canada. Her Majesty's Government is also of the opinion that British Columbia should be united to Canada, anticipating that the interests of all the provinces of British North America would be advanced by such a union, as it will better enable the wealth, credit and intelligence of the whole to be brought to bear on every part, than by encouraging each in the contracted policy of taking care of itself, possibly at the expense of its neighbour. It is evident that the establishment of a British line of communication between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans would be more feasible by the operations of a single Government than by bargains negotiated with separate, and in some respects, rival Governments."

There is much matter here for thought and comment. Lord Granville's presence at the Colonial Office is almost enough to reconcile us the idea of Mr. Gladstone's keeping a long lease of power. He is one of the ablest men of the day, and it is a source of such gratification to see him at the head of a department so long mismanaged as the Colonial, that all parties would regret his leaving it.

It is to be regretted that we have not his dispatch itself at hand, but the telegraphic summary given above indicates much. It confirms, in the first place, what a correspondent signing himself "Diogenes the Younger," maintained in these columns some weeks ago: that Lord Granville was probably better acquainted with the state and requirements of New Zealand than the Spectator and other critics. This may be, at least fairly surmised from the phrase deprecating "the contracted policy of (each province) taking care of itself, possibly at the expense of its neighbour." But, putting this aside as immaterial there remain two most important facts clearly brought out even in this telegram; one that the British Government is determined to resist any attempt at annexation by the United States of any part of British America; the other that it is at last awake to the importance of doing what should have been done years ago—constructing for the China trade a road entirely through British possessions, which shall make it independent of the American line. Both of these objects are indispensably necessary to England, while in no sense aggressive upon America, and it is in no spirit of hostility or jealousy that we proceed to their examination.

It cannot excite wonder that the British Government should contemplate or encourage the construction of a line of communication between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of its North American possessions. The wonder is that it has not been completed long since, and it cannot be said that the idea has not long ago been suggested. So soon as the Oregon Treaty defined her boundary and gave to England the whole of Vancouver's Island, the importance of the harbours of Victoria and Esquimault became apparent to a few thinking and far seeing men, and the design of making the port to be founded there the receiving port for China silk, mails, and passengers en route to Europe, was immediately advocated in the press. At the other end of the proposed line we had already the splendid harbour of Halifax, 300 miles nearer to Liverpool than is New York; and including, as did the design, the establishment of a terminus on the coast of Galway, several useful objects of immense importance to England—the consolidation of her North American possessions, the protection and advantage of her China trade, and the offer of work and wealth to Ireland—it ought to have been immediately put in execution. But the Colonial Office had been for so long, was traditionally, in fact, the worst managed department of our Government—the affairs, the wants and wishes of our forty-two colonies had been always so systematically neglected—the Secretaryship, never a popular one with statesmen, as seeming to afford little opportunity for display, while certainly involving much hard and harassing labour—that this grand design fell dead from the hands of its authors and it is only now, when American enterprise has accomplished a far harder task and has commenced to reap its reward—only now, when danger menaces our North American possessions, that the plan is taken up again. Whether it will ever be carried out remains to be seen. Let us examine it a little in detail.

From Liverpool to Quebec there are two routes; one via Halifax for winter passage by rail, and the other practicable for at least eight months of the year, up the Gulf of St. Lawrence, by steamer. The distance from Liverpool to Quebec, via Halifax, is about 3,060 miles, by the Gulf a hundred miles less; from Quebec to Lake Huron through the canals, river and Lakes Ontario and Erie is another 500; thence to the head of Lake Superior is 540 miles, and thence to the Pacific 1,500. The whole distance from Liverpool to Vancouver's Island is therefore 5,500 or 5,600 miles. We have not at hand the latest maps or statements of the Canadian railways, but the most recent in our possession show us the iron road passing from Quebec down the bank of the St. Lawrence, skirting the north side of Lake Ontario and crossing to Huron, avoiding Erie altogether, and the north side of Lake Superior, to Fort Charlotte at its head, presents no engineering obstacles. The whole of this part of the journey may therefore be made by land or water at choice. From Vancouver's Island to Hongkong, touching here, the distance is 6,900 miles. The whole distance from Liverpool to Hongkong is therefore 12,500 or 12,400 miles.

This is slightly shorter than the American line now in operation. For—from Liverpool to New York is 2,917 miles, from New York to San Francisco about 3,200, from San Francisco hither 4,850 by one route taken by the steamers, and 5,000 by the other, and hence to Hongkong 1,880; in all, say 12,650 or 12,800, according to seasons.

At both of the termini of this proposed railroad is coal in good quality and in abundance. The coal mines of Nova Scotia have long been worked, and are well known; that of Vancouver's island have only lately been opened. At Nanaimo it is found within a few yards of the water side, in two seams, each six feet thick, overlaying each other and running inland so far as to be practically inexhaustible. The harbour is a good one, and ships drawing 16 feet of water can anchor close to the shore. The timber and iron, for constructing the road, are also plentiful at both ends of the line, and the former material is ready to the axe along most of its length. Labour, capital and enterprise are what are wanted and, stimulated by the fact that our rivals of the United States have done their work, while we have been thinking about beginning ours, it is possible that it may be soon commenced.

The problem whether tea can be carried by either of these trans-continental routes remains to be solved. So far, the American line of Pacific steamers has been mainly made to pay by means of the immense numbers of Chinese passengers carried and by the specie freight. Neither of these sources of income would be open to the English line, or, at least, the latter would only be partially so. The Frazer River gold diggings, though promising well, have not yet produced much, and of other treasure, though what London sent to China would be probably dispatched through Canada, for choice, still there would always be the American line in the field to compete for the carriage. It is more for a political than for strictly commercial purpose that the line is required, more the duty of the British and Canadian Government to build it than the interest of any public company. This we shall presently attempt to show. For this time we content ourselves with broaching the subject—a subject, certainly of the greatest importance to all traders in these latitudes. If we can only raise discussion on it our work will not be thrown away.—Japan Times.

THE LEGEND OF THE NUN'S TOWER.

A valorous knight, one of the former lords of Theben, having fallen in love with the beautiful daughter of a neighbouring baron, between whom and himself existed a deadly feud, the father strictly forbade all intercourse between them; and finding one day that the girl favoured her lover, and that stolen interviews took place, was so infuriated that he at once determined to immure his daughter in a convent. The enamoured knight soon discovered the retreat of his mistress, and taking with him an armed body of his retainers, attacked the convent by night, striking terror into the hearts of the abbess and her nuns, and carrying the trembling recluse off to his castle. Arrived here, he placed her for greater safety in a solitary turret, perched upon a rock, and standing aloof from the rest of the fortress, which he surrounded with men in ambush. While, however, dallying in his lady's bower, the castle was surprised by a very superior force, headed by the enraged father. The castle was ransacked, and the lovers being found, the soldiers were ordered to surround the smaller tower, to the dismay of its inmates, who soon saw that their precautions were wholly inadequate to the circumstances. They resolved, however, not to be taken, preferring a voluntary death to an ignominious capture, and a subsequent fate of which imagination represented to them a frightful picture. The secret passage, which may now be seen leading from the spiral staircase through the rock to the water's edge below, unhappily did not then exist, and there remained but one resource for the hapless pair. They appeared for one moment on the summit of the tower, locked in each other's embrace. As they looked down despairingly on their besiegers, a prompt order to draw their bows was given to his archers by the relentless baron; but ere the heartless command could be executed, both had leapt into the stream below, and the peaceful waters were flowing on, regardless of the cruel tragedy of which they had been the scene.—Pictures of Hungarian Life.

ENGLISH ETIQUETTE IN THE EAST.

A correspondent of the Japan Times, has written the following letter on the above subject, which applies equally to Hongkong as to Yokohama, and will therefore no doubt be read with interest:—

"I sadly want your advice and assistance. I am a recent arrival here, and look forward to a longer or shorter stay, as it may please the deities who preside over human destinies. Though I should severely resent the imputation of age, it unless came in the flattering form of a tribute to the maturity of my judgment, I must confess to you that I am no longer in what the French call my "first youth." I have had more than a slight acquaintance with the world. I have resided in many of the great cities of Europe, where my introductions have opened the door of much agreeable and polished society to me, and I have accordingly accustomed myself to look upon the rules which guide the social economy of the civilised world as binding upon those who claim the privilege of belonging to it. But my experience of Yokohama puzzles me, and unless it has some social code which I have not the discrimination to discover, and which reposes upon some loftier principles than those which form the basis of European society, I fail to understand why this basis is departed from. Pray do not misjudge me; I am in no sense severe on these points. I would —at least I think so—rather be rescued from drowning by a gentleman who had not been introduced to me, than be allowed to perish because this indispensable step to the familiarity such an act would involve had not been complied with. It is possible, indeed, that when entirely safe again, I might resent the act of my deliverer; but I have arrived at an age at which I ought to be able to trust myself, and have so much accustomed myself to forgive injuries that I should be surprised at my own obduracy should my feelings dictate any other course. I should force myself to make every allowance for his awkward humanity, and concede to his probable ignorance of etiquette the pardon which a not unamiable nature can grant even to serious provocation. But self respect imposes limits to these concessions, and it is because I am sensible that these limits have been reached that I appeal to you as the Arbiter elegantiarum of the settlement.

"My case is simply this. I was told that it was customary here to call on such of the residents as represented the official, military, and mercantile circles of the place, and with some little reluctance I conformed to this custom, which, as you must be aware, violates the very first rule of society in England. I naturally imagined that those at least of my countrymen who had submitted to this ordeal would be solicitous to preserve me from more pain than it necessarily involved, and as far as my immediate reception was concerned I have nothing to complain of. But—you will hardly credit it—with one or two exceptions, which were all the more grateful from being exceptions, I have not had the honour of finding my call returned. Sometimes an invitation to dinner, doubtless kindly intended, was the only response to my call, but in the great majority of cases, it was entirely neglected. My visits comprised many residents on the bluff, others in the town, and I did not even stop short at "the swamp." With becoming recognition of the grades of society which an English conservative education has made part of my moral nature, I visited the various Ministers of the Treaty Powers, the subordinate foreign officials, and so down the incline which led me (I use the word in no invidious sense) to "the swamp" before mentioned. Yet in the majority of cases, the same result has attended my well-intentioned courtesies.

"Now, Sir, I think you will agree with me, that this is not as it should be. I do not suppose for a moment that it arises from any intentional discourtesy, indeed, I am sure it does not; but it argues a neglect of a custom invariable among all nations, and, if I may venture to say so, an absence of that benevolence in small things which lies at the root of good manners. To one accustomed to the rigid punctilio that regulates those questions in European countries, and nowhere more so than in England, this neglect has a most disagreeable effect, and can never be dissociated from a slight, which even though unintentional, is very chilling. It argues a want of that nice perception of social duties found in all cultivated communities, and which makes good society so agreeable, so smooth, and so attractive. We are so constituted that forms are necessary to preserve the spirit which animates them, and with the destruction of these forms this spirit disappears. A small concession of time or inclination will enable any one to return a call within the time custom prescribes; no man is so busy that he cannot, if he will, find the opportunity of discharging a duty which custom, good breeding, and good feeling alike exact. The pain which the making of such advances causes to every Englishman is quite sufficient without superadding to it the feeling that they are slighted, or at all events that there is no response to them. In Europe, and I presume in America, such conduct would either be impossible, or would convey the impression that there were reasons for the neglect which the caller would have a perfect right to demand, and if he thought proper, to challenge. Here it seems otherwise; but I cannot think the breach of so good a custom is calculated to advance our reputation for good feeling and politeness.

"Why should not the same rules obtain here which are common over the whole civilized, almost over the whole uncivilized, world? It is not customary for Ministers to return all the visits they receive; but I have never yet, in the course of many years of travel and leisure, known a case in which my call was not acknowledged by a card sent to my Hotel or place of residence. When a gentleman, impelled by a proper sense of respect for authority, presents himself at the Legation, either of his own or any other Minister, it is right that his act should be properly acknowledged. No man likes to make an unreturned bow, and the case of an acknowledged call differs but in degree from this. These responses from men in authority, to acts prompted by respect and good feeling, are of more value and importance than appears on the surface of the matter. They tend to support that sense of self-respect which is one of the greatest safeguards of society, and minister in a legitimate manner to that proper and defensive pride which is so necessary an ingredient in a well-formed character. After the first call has been thus formally acknowledged, the obligation to return it of course ceases, and no one will expect that the occasional inscription of his name in the Legation visiting-book demands any further return of the attention. But I am quite sure that all will agree upon the necessity for a proper acknowledgement of the first call.

"As between men in an equal condition of life, according to that code which brackets together the professional and mercantile classes, and embraces the great majority of the members of a community like that of Yokohama, the return of a call should be looked upon as imperative, and the neglect of it treated as a breach of good manners and good feeling.

"I have trespassed somewhat more on your space than I intended; and must request your indulgence as well as that of your readers; but the subject is far more important than many imagine, and my object has been to call attention to it in such a manner as neither to cause any ill feeling nor to give any colour to the possible suspicion, that I have more to complain of than any other stranger arriving in the place. I would also deprecate the idea that I am presuming to read a lay sermon to this community. I am but calling attention to a little laxity of practice which has, in this respect, crept in amongst us, and which a very slight attention on our part should, and doubtless will, at once correct."

MR. GOLDWIN SMITH ON CANADA.

(Quebec Morning Chronicle, Oct 23.)

A lengthy letter on the Canadian question, from Mr. Goldwin Smith, appears in the London Daily News. Mr. Smith says he has always advocated that Canada should be made a quasi-independent nation, when a fitting opportunity presented itself. Great Britain should guarantee her independence for a number of years, and the English flag, with some slight heraldic difference, should still be permitted to float from Canadian flagstaffs. Mr. Smith holds that this is the wisest and safest way out of a difficulty that ought to be done away with. No commercial advantages accrue to England from the colony retained as a dependency which would not accrue from trade with her as an independent nation. As matters are, Canada lays heavy import duties on the products of our industry, as though we were a foreign nation, and while she is a dependency we dare not even remonstrate, though all the time we are guaranteeing her loans. On the other hand, Canada is herself placed in perpetual danger by our disputes with the United States, and in case of real war her doom would be certain. If independent, there is no apparent reason why she should not live in perfect amity with America. That amity, however, would not be brought about through annexation, for although to Mr. Smith's mind there is a possibility that all the English-speaking communities of North America will ultimately be connected in some sort of confederation for trade purposes and external security, still America would have no gratification in having Anglified Canada for her child, and Canada would scarcely even consent to have America for her preceptor.

MISCELLANEOUS.

In "Formosa" Boucicault says that some of the dirtiest work in London is done by the whitest hands. Do the London playwrights wear gloves?

A MODEST EDITOR.—A lady in Milwaukie discussing the garter question, writes:—"You will take notice that just above the knee there is no hollow or depression in which a garter could be retained, no projection on which could make a hold." To which the Buffalo Republic modestly replies—"Will we take notice? Cou'dn't think of it. We don't know anything about garters. Don't want to. May be worn about the waist for all we know. Take notice, indeed!"

A home paper publishes the following extract from a letter recently received from Mr. Thomas Carlyle:—"If you know any likely man in Peterhead, I wish you would tell him that the word 'Hochkirchen' they have put on the inscription under Keith's statue is an ugly blotch of error, much requiring erasure for their sake and his. 'Hochkirch' was the village where Keith perished; there is no such place as 'Hochkirchen' is the whole world, nor will ever be. 'Hochkirchen' is worse than 'Peterheadtein,' an incurable solecism—exactly equal to 'Alta Ecclesia,' of which you can judge! No remedy but cutting out that EN (at whatever cost), and substituting silent granite."

A young man named Henry James Tucker, a carpenter, was charged at the Clerkenwell police court with causing the death of another young man named Henry May, his brother-in-law, by shooting him through the body. The two men with others were at work in a house in Blackstock-lane, Hornsey, where a man had left a gun loaded, telling the other men not to interfere with it. While May was standing on the staircase, Tucker took up the gun, put it to his shoulder, cocked it, and told May to die. Before the latter could be aware of the other man's intention the tigger was pulled, and May fell dead on the spot. Tucker, who appeared greatly distressed, immediately ran for a doctor, but the wounded man died before the doctor arrived. There had been no quarrel between the two men. The prisoner was remanded.

COMMERCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

HONGKONG, TUESDAY EVENING.

A fair amount of business has been done in Bengal drug to-day, the demand being altogether from Chinese quarters. The following are the ruling prices:—Patna, $537½ to $538¼, cash and credit; Benares, $525 to $526¼, cash and credit; estimated unsold stock in two hands, about 1,500 chests. Patna on time of the 12th sales $535 to $537½ from speculators hands. New Patna 1st sales $562½ to $565, on three weeks' time; New Benares 1st sales $525 to $527½; Malwa, $640 to $645, good drug wanted by the natives.

In Raw Cotton sales have been made to the extent of 214 bales Bengal Staple at $15.00 to to $20.75 per picul; estimated unsold stock, about 4,200 bales Bengal, 3,600 bales Kurachee, Madras 80 bales, Bombay none, total 7,880 bales. There has been nothing doing to-day in the markets for general merchandise. The departure of the mail and the Christmas holidays, no doubt, having some effect in producing the very quiet and dull state of affairs existing. There are buyers of Steamboat shares at 27 premium, but no business is reported in any kind of shares.

ENGLISH AND CHINESE DICTIONARY, WITH THE
PUNTI AND MANDARIN PRONUNCIATION.
AN ANGLO-CHINESE DICTIONARY, by the Rev. W. LOBSCHEID, published at the Daily Press Office, Hongkong.

FOR scope and practical service this Work stands unrivalled. All the new words which the Chinese have of late years been compelled to coin to express the numerous objects in machinery, photography, telegraphy, and in science generally, which the rapid advance of foreign relations has imposed upon them, are here given in extenso. Each and every word is fully illustrated and explained, forming exercises for students of a most instructive nature. Both the Court and Punti pronunciations are given, the accents being carefully marked on the best principle hitherto attained. The typography displays the success of an attempt to make the Chinese and English type correspond in the size of body, thereby effecting a vast economy of space, achieving a clearness not previously attained, and dispensing with those vast margins and vacant spaces which have heretofore characterized Chinese publications.

The scope of the work is so great, and its utilitarian purposes so complete, that a reference to its pages enables a person who understands English to communicate effectively with natives who understand nothing but Chinese. In this respect the work will be found indispensable to all Europeans residing in China, and to the natives themselves it explains subjects fully, with which very few indeed of them are perfectly acquainted. To parties resident in England and interested in China it cannot but be invaluable occasionally.

It comprises upwards of two thousand large quarto pages.

Post-Office Notifications.

A mail will close.
For Shanghai.—Per Suwonada, at 3.30 P.M., to-day, the 29th instant.

It is hereby notified for general information, by order of His Excellency SIR RICHARD GRAVES MACDONNELL, that henceforward Book Packets, and Packets of Patterns or Samples of Merchandize, may be transmitted through the Post by the Mails made up to be forwarded both by the British Contract Packets and by Private ships, between this Office and each Agency thereof in China and Japan, viz.: Canton, Swatow, Amoy, Foochow, Ningpo, Shanghai, Nagasaki, Hiogo, and Yokohama, and also between any two of these Agencies, at the following rates of postage, which must be paid in advance, viz.:—
Not exceeding 4 oz. ... 6 cents.
Above 4 oz., and not exceeding 8 oz. 12 ,,
,, 8 ,, ,, 1 lb. 24 ,,
,, 1 lb. ,, ,, 1½ ,, 36 ,,
Every additional ½lb ... 12 ,,
Special attention is directed to the following rules and regulations, which will be strictly enforced:—

AS REGARDS BOOKS.
A Book Packet may contain any number of separate Books, Almanacks, Maps or Prints, and any quantity of paper, vellum or parchment (to the exclusion of letters whether sealed or open); and the Books, Maps, Paper, &c., may be either printed, written or plain, or any mixture of the three.
All legitimate binding, mounting or of a portion thereof, will be allowed, whether such binding be lose or attached; as also rollers in the case of prints, markers (whether of paper or otherwise,) in the case of Books, and in short whatever is necessary for the safe transmission of literary or artistic matter or usually appertains thereto.
Every Book packet must be either without a cover, or in a cover open at the ends or sides.
It must not contain any letter, open or sealed, nor any sealed enclosure whatever; the name and address of the sender is however not only permitted, but recommended, so that if the cover come off, or for any other reason the packet cannot be forwarded, it may be returned.
No packet must exceed two feet in length, breadth or depth, exceeding these dimensions it cannot be forwarded through the Post.

AS REGARDS PATTERNS.
They must not be of intrinsic value. This rules excludes all articles of a saleable nature, and indeed, whatever may have a value of its own, apart from its mere use as a pattern; and the quantity of any material sent ostensibly as a pattern, must not be so great that it can fairly be considered as having on this ground an intrinsic value.
There must be no writing or marks other than the address of the person for whom the packet is intended, and that of the sender, a trade mark and numbers, and prices of the articles; otherwise the Packet will be detained, or forwarded charged an unpaid letter.
The Patterns must be sent in covers open at ends, so as to be easy of examination. Samples, however, of seeds, drugs, and so forth, which cannot be sent in open covers, may be enclosed in bags of linen or other material, tied at the neck; bags so closed that they cannot readily be opened, even although they be transparent, must not be used for this purpose. Non-compliance with this rule, will also subject the packet to be detained or forwarded as an unpaid letter.
The Packets, or the contents thereof, must not contain any inclosure, sealed or otherwise closed against inspection.
In all other respects the general regulations of the Book Post between Hongkong and the United Kingdom will apply to the Pattern Post. Under these regulations, in order to prevent any interruption to the regular transmission of letters, a Packet of Patterns may, when it is necessary, be kept back for the following Mail, by which, in the ordinary course, it would be forwarded.
The decision of the Postmaster-General as to the eligibility of any Packet, pattern, or sample contained therein, to be forwarded under these regulations, will be final and conclusive.
The rule which forbids the transmission through the Post of any article likely to injure the contents of the Mail Bags or Boxes, or the person of any Officer of the Post Office, is, of course, applicable to the Pattern Post; and a packet containing anything of the kind will be stopped, and not sent to its destination. Articles such as the following have been occasionally posted as Patterns, and have been detained as unfit for the Post, viz.: Metal boxes, porcelain and China, fruit, vegetables, bunches of flowers, cuttings of plants, spurs, knives, scissors, needles, pins, pieces of machinery, sharp pointed instruments, samples of metals, samples of ore, samples in glass bottles, pieces of glass, acids of various kinds, curry combs, copper and steel engraving plates, and confectionery of all kinds.

Extracts.

An Interrupted Picnic.

We got out of all patience at last, and determined to have the forest beaten up as the only way to convince the natives of the groundlessness of their fears. We resolved at the same time to mix pleasure with business by making a picnic of the thing, in which the ladies should join us. Our arrangements were soon completed, and we started—the gentlemen on horseback, and the ladies filling the howdah on the back of a very steady elephant belonging to the regiment. We had selected as the most suitable place for our purpose a hollow in the forest, with which stood several overgrown trees. In these we proposed to station ourselves, and blaze away everything the beaters turned out above the size of a jackal. On reaching this spot, therefore, Chuny and the horses were dismissed, and a ladder placed against the largest of the trees, by which the ladies ascended into a cozy nook within its lofty shade. There they found a table-cloth spread, on which tiffin was laid for them. The gentlemen, however, finding none of the other trees large enough to hold them all, sought the shady side of the hollow, where, laying their guns aside, they set seriously to work on the tongue, cold roasted fowls, preserved meats, iced liquors, and fruit, which the careful forethought of Ali Khan, the major's khansamah, had also provided for them. Meanwhile, signals had been passed to the beaters, who had gone to their starting-point some time before, to begin their noisy operations. We leisurely finished our tiffin, and felt so supremely comfortable, that we quite resented to a reminder from Ali Khan that the beaters had been some time at work. We resolved, however, to delay taking up our guns, and perching ourselves in the trees, no further than after finishing the cigars then lighted and a couple more bottles of iced pale ale. These were opened, and we were chatting pleasantly over their contents, when our attention was suddenly called to the terrified looks of one of the servants, who, with outstretched arm, pointed unsteadily at some object behind us. We cast a hurried look in the same direction, and sprang to our feet as two immense-looking tigers met our view. They had emerged stealthily from the cover, and were standing with heads erect and fluttering ears, listening intently to the distant clamour of the beaters. Ere we could recover from the confusion into which we were thrown, the largest animal—from his size and deeper colour, evidently the male—disappeared among the long grass, and with breathless anxiety we heard his heavy tread approaching us. In a moment more we were face with him. He started back, rushed towards the tree within which the unfortunate ladies were seated, and, to our horror, scrambled quickly up the ladder. The next moment the tigress was upon us. She, too, started on seeing us, and retreated a few paces. Her courage, however, quickly rose, for she wheeled round with a short angry roar, and fixing her glowing eyes upon us, advanced steadily with tail erect, and her ears set viciously back. Suddenly she crouched within a few paces of us, with her head resting on her fore-paws, when, at that critical moment, the beaters combined to raise a louder and more discordant noise than usual. The tigress rose, turned her head, listened, and slunk away. Her mate had just then descended the ladder, and as she brushed past him he struck at her savagely, and rolled her over with a single blow. He then stood over her with averted head and closed eyes, but offering no further violence. In no way daunted, the tigress turned quickly upon her back, and clutching her mate tighly round the shoulder attacked him with tooth and nail. Their united roaring was horrible. He received her assault for a few seconds with considerable firmness, but finding no symptom of mollification, shook himself free, and bounding lightly over her as she rose, galloped into the jungle in the direction away from the beaters. The tigress rose, shook herself, gave one malignant look at us, trotted sulkily after her mate, and all was over. We lost no time in going to the assistance of the ladies. To our great relief, we found them unhurt, but only one of them fully conscious of what had passed. She had the presence of mind to remain perfectly still, and stated afterwards that on making his appearance, and before becoming aware of their presence, the tiger placed one of his fore-paws among their feet. He appeared more astonished than alarmed, scowled steadily round, and closed his survey with a prolonged stare at the solitary individual who had retained her senses. He then retired as quickly as he came.—"Two Minutes of Suspense," in Chambers's Journal.

Early Marriages.

(From the Bombay Gazette, November 8.)

In these days when retrenchment hangs like a black cloud over all those Anglo-Indians whose incomes are derived from, or in any way dependant upon, Government, it would not be amiss to say a word or two upon what might be called subaltern matrimony. In spite of the late lamentations from Belgravia, and the desolating pictures of matrimonial famine which every English sea-side watering-place presents to the eyes of the observant traveller, Young Anglo-India so far differs from Young England, that it rather goes in for marriage. It finds very reactionary and narrow spirited perhaps to say so; but, to our thinking, in so doing, Young Anglo-India as a rule commits a mistake. We confess we don't see what are the advantages of most of these early marriages. In a young missionary, anxious to weight his cross as heavily as possible, we can understand the inventity of the expedient of adding a mother-in-law to the abominations of the climate; but for Lieutenant Squeedles, or Chuckers of the Civil Service or Revenue Survey, to go and get married at three or four and twenty, on Rs. 400 a month, or less, we see no advantage whatever; while of disadvantages we can gather up handfuls. Of course, there still exist such things as love and passion. There are, and ever will be, men who hold Angelina (or Mary Jane, for it's the same thing) far above all earthly considerations, and would struggle on to her embraces though they tr[o]d the earth red with the blood of squelched prude[n]t[ia]l counsels. But with these we have no dealing. Like Major Hannibal Chollop, they are free children of the wild "parcerers" of unreason; and their mission being to thump their heads against a post, one can only let them do it with a reverent thankfulness that their mission is other than our own. But we take it that majority of marriages do not partake of this semi-hysterical character. Most young men and women in love look upon one another very much as they look upon other young men and women; and although, of course, affection and prepossession exist, they are very often supported by the belief that intimacy will develop other good qualities and strengthen an attachment now something of the churam order. With girls, especially, this kind of reasoning is very common, in self-justification of engaging themselves to a man of whom they know considerably less than would be considered sufficient by their brothers to induce them to lend him a fifty rupee note. They have so many influencing motives to say yes to a man's proposal, over and above those which he has to induce him to make it. It lends a girl so much dignity, too, being engaged; and, besides, it is always possible to break it off fast for a day, and then to burst into tears after prayers, and say—"Mamma, dear, I am sure I can never never be happy with him" is all that is necessary. In short, to assume that is useless to argue against early marriages between a young man who has barely anything of his own, and a girl whose parents have nothing to give her, and time thrown away; because they do it when whirling along in the brawling torrent of passion, and are insensible alike to reason, or signal, is to assume a position which is quite untenable. Look round upon one's married acquaintances, and endeavour to estimate how many of them could, under any conceivable circumstances, have been hurried into matrimony by passion for one another? Rather do we not (speaking for the once with that frankness which the world finds so indigestible) find ourselves wondering, with regard to most married couples we know, what were the particular advantages which induced a matrimonial alliance between them. How often do we not hear said and say—"What could have induced B. to marry that woman?"—or—"I wonder how he ever induced her to have him?" No, there are other reasons, besides passion, which induce early marriage. Men think "it's jolly." They believe an Indian married life is one of greater comfort; that it is more economical; that it even assists them in society, and so on. But what are the facts—the, with a few exceptions, too common facts? The first thing that happens, is, that the young subaltern, or civilian, whose Rs. 400 or so a month did very well, and something over, when spent with ordinary prudence as a bachelor, finds it is but a pitiful matter, now that he has a wife to keep up in comfort and propriety. They must have a house; and they must have more servants; and she must have a carriage; and we suppose milliners don't make, even for subalterns' wives, for nothing. And there are little expenses of sorts, which he may deny her, or which they may both deny themselves, but which they neither of them contemplated having to deny themselves when they stood in "fond rapture" (which is the poetry for tight boots and perspiration) at the altar. And then if they are very poor, and his prospects of promotion are doubtful, and his interest no greater than that which his father-in-law may possess, who has sons of his own to look after, the happy young couple are rapidly gladdened with the advent of a son and heir. Poor Chuckers at three and twenty with Rs. 400 a month, and all his worldly goods in a couple of tents, is the proud father of a baby! Happy man! Then he has to keep up a house in the station—two establishments in fact. People with whom the parental feeling is strong may fancy that this is more than compensated for by the joy he must experience in the rains, when he goes into the station himself, and with his household gods around him, abandons himself to the happy society of his wife and child. But the baby fallacy has exploded a good deal in India, even among those who are responsible for their production. Few fathers now-a-days fail to recognize the bad points about babies. Cheap Indian houses in the mofussil are of a kind where a noise has it all its own way; and, although Charles Napoleon Augustus is very well for the time being, when presented newly washed, and dressed, and fed, at chota hazari, it is different at night, or in the heat of the day, when grims, or colic, or wind, or whatever the predisposing cause may be, sets the darling going into a good hour's consistent screaming, the ayah's melancholy crooning making monotonous second, and Mary Jane finally begging you to put on your topee, and go a mile or so for the doctor, who never will attend to mere chits. And then, when this one is big enough to require a pony, and can pull your paper to pieces, and convert your drawing room into a sort of day after an earthquake appearance, Mrs. Chuckers produces another occupant for its discarded; and so on, till when that long expected promotion does come, there are a couple for each knee, and another in the next room with the ayah, and the doctor says that if Chuckers does not send them all home, and his wife too, two of them will probably die;—and that Mrs. C. requires at least three years in England to recruit herself. About this period Chuckers borrows at 10 per cent.—if he's lucky; and thenceforth the happy burden of his waking dreams is not—"When shall I have saved enough to go home comfortably?"—but—"When shall I have saved enough to pay off my debts?" We are drawing no imaginary picture. There are hundreds existing before us at this moment—all cases of men who have rushed, with the characteristic recklessness of penury into matrimony, without a moment's thoughtful pause as to whether they were doing well or no. And yet, although many and grievous as are the instances, we see where a remedial rule would have worked wholesomely, it is impossible to lay any rule down.
